

The ban on cross ownership helps keep small broadcasters alive. Small broadcasters contribute immensely to the diversity of content available to the American public, as the Framers of the Constitution clearly intended in establishing a free press. Across the board corporate ownership of broadcast media by fewer and fewer companies clearly results in a deterioration of the quality and range of content available. It is the FCC's responsibility and duty to keep the ban in effect.